Manager's Comment

Market Commentary

- Helped by improving earnings prospects and the retreat in US Treasury yields and the greenback, Asian equities extended their uptrend in April. The MSCI AC Asia Pacific ex Japan index strengthened by 1.6% in USD terms over the month. The positive return was largely contributed by the lower yielding information technology sector, due to strong performances from benchmark heavyweights like Samsung and Tencent. This partly explains why high dividend yield stocks lagged the broader market rally with MSCI AC Asia Pacific ex Japan High Dividend Yield Index ending the month almost flat.
- At a country level, Australia was the worst performing market, partly due to the market's heavy exposure to materials and energy which retreated over the month. On the other hand, South Asia markets mostly performed well as a weaker US dollar and lower bond yields provided some relief from previous fears of capital outflows.
- Overall, Asian credit markets continued their healthy uptrends against the backdrop of a slight fall in US Treasury yields over the month. High yield bonds extended their outperformance against investment grade. Credit spreads remain tight which continues to attract issuers to the market, reflected by the quite crowded pipeline of new issuance.

Market Outlook and Strategy

- Overall, the environment for Asian equities remains benign, buoyed by optimism over the outlook for the global economy and improving earnings momentum. The recent stabilisation in the US dollar and Treasury yields has offered additional tailwinds. It would not be surprising to see some consolidation in markets after the strong rally so far this year, but we expect the improving corporate fundamentals to underpin the medium to longer term outlook.
- Over recent months, we have tilted the portfolio towards cyclical yield stocks. This has paid off in the sharp market rotation led by deep cyclical sectors such as materials and financials. However, at this juncture, we see much of this rotation has played out and there is good valuation support for higher yielding defensive stocks.
- We maintain our constructive outlook on Asian high yield credits over the course of this year. Despite the US Federal Reserve tightening, the yield levels are still attractive for global investors hunting for income. Valuations are on the high end but demand dynamics, especially from local investors, remain supportive. There has been a slight increase in the number of default cases in China. However, such defaults have been limited to the onshore market and the size of defaulted credits relative to the overall market is small.
